HETTIE MARVIN. THE GIRL THAT WOULDN'T TELL

Saturday, June 13, 1874.

When the British and Tories attacked New London, Conn., in 17-, and set a price on the head of Governor Griswold, the latter fled to the town of L-, where his cousin, Mrs. Marvin, hid him, for some days, in a secluded farm-house. But at length the sub le foe discovered his re-rest; and one sunny afternoon in May he was routed from his hiding-place, by the idings that a band of horsemen were approaching to capture him.

His only chance of escape was to reach he mouth of a little creek, which emptied tself into the Connecticut river, just bove the entrance of the latter into Long Island Sound. There he had a boat sta tioned, with two faithful attendants hidden beneath the high banks of the creek. The listance from the farm-house to the boat was two miles by the usual traveled road. But a little sheep path across the farmer's orchards would bring him to the road, only a mile from the boat; and save a quarter's length of his tearful run for life. Just where the narrow path from the orchard opened into the road, Hetty Marvin sat with her dog Towser, tending the oleaching of the household linen. The long web of forty yards, or more, which was diligently spun and woven during the long winter months, was whitened in May, and thus made ready for use. The business of bleaching was well economized, being usually done by the younger daugh ters of the family, who were not old enough to spin, or strong enough for the neavier work of the kitchen and dairy. The roll of linen was taken by the farner or his stout "help" to a grassy plat, beside a spring or meadow brook. There it was thoroughly wetted and spread upon the green turf, to take the best heat of the sun by day and the dew at night. The tittle maiden who sended it, would sit

But she quiety comprehended the scene, and instantly quieted her faithful Towser, who, though a friend of the family guest, thought it becoming to bark loudly at his hurried steps.

Here wise forethought arrested the Govdelude his pursuers. Then they will turn off the other way.' "Oh, cousin !" said the little girl, in an agony of distress, "I cannot tell a lie; indeed I cannot; why did you tell me which way you were going !"

"Hetty, dear child, surely you would not betray me to my death! Hark ! they are coming—I hear the click of their horses' feet. Oh, Hetty, tell them I have gone up the road instead of down; and eaven will bless you." "Heaven never blesses those who speak falsely, cousin! But I will not tell them which way you go, even if they kill me; so run as quickly as possible."

"It's of no use; unless I can deceive them, I am a dead man." "Cousin, cousin, hide under my web of ling my linen." "It's my only chance, child; I'll get down, as you say." And suiting the tion to the word, the Governor was soon hidden under the ample folus of the cloth. Angry that their expected prey had es caped from the house where they hoped to secure him, the six mounted Tories, headed by a British officer, dushed along the road in swift pursuit. At sight of little girl in the meadow, the leader of the party paused. "Child," he said sternly, "have yo "Yes, sir," replied lietty, trembling

"Fil have it out of her," exclaimed the furious officer, with an oath.

"Let me speak to her," said his Tory guide; "I know the child, I believe. Isn't rour name Hetty Marvin ?" he asked pleasantly. "Yes, sir."

"And this man that ran by you a few ninutes ago, was your mother's cousin,

"Just so, Hetty; that was very true. I hope he won't have to fly far. Where was he going to try to hide! you see I could help him if I knew his plans." Now Hetty was not a wit deceived by this smooth speech. But she was willing to tell as much of the truth as would consist with his safety, and she wisely judged that her frankness would serve her kinsman better than her silence. So she answered her questioner candidly. "My cousin said that he was going down this way to the river, where he had a boat;

her face from sight. Her tormentors did not stay longer soothe or question her. They had got, as they supposed, the information which they wanted; and rushed rapidly on down to the river. Now the Governor had an ranged a signal with his boatmen, that a white cloth by day, or a light in the night displayed from the attic window of his hiding-place, which was just visible at the mouth of the creek, should intorm them he were in trouble, and put them upon the alert to help him. As soon, therefore, as he started from his cousin's, the signal floated from the window to warn them And when they saw the pursuring parts desh madly down the road to the river and recognizing the British uniform of the eader, they pulled swiftly out to sea. > There was need of technical knowledge of the subject, but it should grow out of the practical use of the language. A lan guage so complex as ours, much more difficult to learn than any exact science, requires many years of careful study. Teachers must be patient. If the best results are not apparent, they should remember the difficulties of the subject and petiently continue their work. Mr. Dickinson of Irvington presented paper upon Arithmetic. He claimed that much time was wasted in teaching analyses, and the reasons for doing things. It was much better that many things should be learned by rule and by practice,

He gave methods of teaching Percentage and Interest. He also gave the "Cause and Effect Method" of teaching Proportion, illustrating by problems on the board. Colonel Baker of East Orange opened the discussion upon Proportion delending the old "Rule of Three." He was follow
